At four years old, Elevate Church in San Diego is registering on the radar even in a subculture where the concept of a Christian church rarely makes a “blip.” As a native of the Bible belt – South Carolina – Kevin Campbell is in a unique position to recognize this particularity of Southern California culture. And as the pioneer of Elevate Church, he is especially thrilled his church plant is reaching exactly that unchurched culture. “In the South there’s a church culture,” Campbell explained. “In Georgia or South Carolina, your kids don’t get invited to birthday parties on Sunday morning, or to anything else, for that matter, even if the person doesn’t even go to church, because that time frame is just assumed to be set aside. Here, the church isn’t even on the radar as a potential activity for Sunday morning.” But for the people who regularly attend Elevate, church is now part of their regular plan..
